

Question 88: How fully does Source D explain how successful the post war Labour Governments (1945-1951) were in creating a 'New Jerusalem'?

The evidence demonstrates this candidate has achieved 6/12 marks in their answer to this question.

A successful response should establish the partial nature of the information provided by introducing wider contextual development. Unfortunately this is missing in this response.

Interpretation

The candidate was awarded 2 marks for providing two clear interpretations of points of evidence from the source. One mark was awarded for:

'Source D says 'The government lost no time ... [nationalising] the Bank of England'. By nationalising banks, a 'New Jerusalem' was created by control the economy to help build a welfare state.'

Wider contextual development

The candidate was awarded 2 marks because the answer provides two detailed, developed points of recalled knowledge which are distinct from the information contained in the source, yet is relevant to the specific question asked.

One mark was awarded for:

'The source does not include the National Health Service Act of 1947 where the British people could get free, comprehensive health care to improve their lives.'

Historical interpretations

The candidate was awarded 2 marks because the answer features two accurate quotes from recognised historians which are relevant to the question asked.

One mark was awarded for:

'It does not include the promise of 250,000 homes being built. Roger Eatwell sees this as a failure of Labour as it did not build that many'