

Candidate 4 evidence

Part 2 – Work

In today's world, it is increasing common to hear young adults putting universities and colleges in their career plan. At the same time, there is a huge debate about whether getting a certificate from them can provide the skills for students to be successful in life. In this essay, if those qualifications are useful ^{and} necessary ^{is} going to be explored. (Compared to only 23% of the ^{technicians who were} ^{to collect} graduates ^{is} getting) a well-paid ^{job} right after finishing universities. Undoubtedly, the qualifications granted to students give them an edge in the employment market. Getting a high salary job means that having a more advanced quality of living, and will have a greater chance of being successful in life. Additionally, schools provide the best opportunities to young people to follow the rapid changing of technology, allowing them to be confident when tackling with it.

On the other hand, some argues that pupils cannot acquire practical skills and working experience at schools. More than two-third of the employees say they did not gain enough skills at school to adapt and be proficient in the ^{workplace} quickly. Certainly, every position require for numerous skills in order to fully accomplish every task. However, it is demanding to ask schools to provide theoretical knowledge to students but also working opportunities in the meanwhile. Therefore, ^{students complain} about ^{volunteering} and part-time jobs are necessary for going into a good company ~~to get a job~~ ^{even though they are coming out from} a well-known college.

Last but not least, according to research, every 4 employers in 5 state that they prioritise candidates' soft skills in front of both theoretical knowledge and qualifications. Doubtlessly, no human can have ^{time} management skill, problem solving skill or creative thinking by just sitting in a classroom all day. Nevertheless, those strengths are critical in every office, and if people want to achieve a successful life, soft skills cannot be ignored. For instance, teamwork is an essential skill since it ^{causes} employers to finish projects with less effort, and also helps them to build an ideal relationship with colleagues and their bosses, which enables people to gain more respects and have a better mental-being.

To conclude, although universities and colleges give out qualifications that benefit students, practical skills and soft skills are the ones that students have to develop by themselves, in order to live ^{like} what most people wish, "successfully". Although sometimes when people really dig deep in it, being successful may just mean being happy everyday.