5a	In This essay I will show the true extent to which the USA has on other countries an impact on other countries. USA uses military, Aid and economic growth to influence other countries.
	In the USA, the military is watched over by the federal government. Every year billions upon billions of dollars gets put into the military. Not only is it well funded, it is the largest military in the world, with it double the size of some other countries defence. This is one way the ^{USA} government has an influence on other countries as usually other countries are put off attacking a world power country such as the USA because of purely it's military defence and the resources they have.
	Another way the USA has an impact on other countries is through it giving international aid to developing countries. Currently, the USA ~~is the largest~~ gives the largest amount of AID in the world, with millions given out every year. This would have a major influence on other countries as if they are the ones receiving the aid there is no telling what economic improvements could be made within that developing country. Although sometimes the type of AID given out is 'bilateral' this means that when the country receiving the aid wants to purchase something using the money, it has to be purchased within the USA at an expensive cost. This shows that although the USA is losing money it gains it back, sometimes at an interest rate.

The final way in which the USA has an impact on other countries is through its economic growth. Most of the major organisations such as, McDonalds, Calvin Klein etc., are American. Companies such as these help to stimulate wealth back into the country, by being placed not only in the USA but other countries like the UK, Germany, ... Russia. This helps the economic growth as all the money is getting brought back into the USA. This shows that it does have an impact as it brings new things to new countries and is also one of the or even the richest country in the world.
