he offend in the future making society not safer.

A religious response with regards to capital sentencing comes from Christians. They would agree that it is wrong to just lock them up as Jesus worked with the outcasts of society. Christians would believe that everyone should be allowed the opportunity to change.

A benefit of this Christian response would be that it allows everyone a second chance and makes people have faith in and trust the justice system - it means that people are able to change for the better in ways which may also benefit society -

An issue arising from this Christian viewpoint is that it ~~does~~ doesn't take into consideration the harm in which the criminal may have caused for many and the fact that the best place for them to be for everyone is prison.

Being in prison can also cause criminals to learn new ways which they can use when returning which is a huge issue in the justice system - By ~~implant~~ being in prison may benefit the criminal more than anyone else.
