One type of sentencing in the UK is Custodial Sentencing, where criminals get sent to jail for crimes serious crimes such as murder or robbery. This protects victims, the public and the offender so that everybody feels safer. more
Another type of sentencing is fines for crimes such as speeding. in This acts as a deterrent towards people as it puts them off speeding. more the
b One moral issue raised by putting fines on certain offenses is that people with lots of money don't mind paying the fines as they have the money to and it doesn't deter them. Also for example if a mother is caught stealing products like nappies or food to survive and then gets fined for just trying to protect and take care of her child it would be extremely unfair as she would have to steal in order to survive. therefore raising the moral issue of whether if fines are effective

	Another moral issue could be raised by putting offenders into rehabilitation centres. This method of sentencing is problematic because a lot of money would be getting spent on criminals along with a lot of time being spent on them as well as if they have offended, do they deserve to have time & money spent on them? Also some criminals don't want to get better and stop offending, therefore it may be a waste of time on them.
26	One purpose of punishment is protection. This could be criminals being on home arrest or being placed in prison. The purpose of this is to protect victims from perpetrators, victims' families, offenders and the offender from people like victims' families or the public giving them abuse. Another purpose of punishment is reformation which is when criminals are placed in rehab centres in order to stop offending and come out with

28	I agree with the statement as from a Christian's view point, people can be forgiven and deserve a second chance, however capital punishment makes it impossible to give second chances as they would be dead. Another reason I agree is that Christians believe that if God put us onto this earth, only the he should be responsible for taking us off, that is why Christians are against murder. Another reason they disagree is that it would be completely unfair no matter what the crime committed was as it doesn't give them the chance to repent or get another chance to reform after death. On the otherhand the I disagree as a Christian may argue that sinning so badly, crimes such as murder, may not be forgiven and they may not even deserve a second chance. Another reason I disagree is that getting rid of of serious criminals protects everybody surrounding the crime and would provide closure to victims families.
