| | if Tessie never rushed to the town square for the ritual to begin when she realised what the day was, would she still be alive? |
| | When Tessie arrives to the lottery she greets the other ladies around her and the chat amongst themselves, one of the ladies ask Tessie, why she was late, where was she? "wouldn't have me leave m' dishes in the sink now, would you." Tessie tells the ladies jokingly jokingly and they giggle. I feel sympathy for Tessie here as she is so oblivious of the horrific fate that lies ahead of her. |
| | The slips of paper are drawn and the Hutchinson family are the ones chosen to be the family that has to draw again for the sacrifice to be revealed when Tessie here's this realisation kicks in and the fact she could be the chosen one nits her she |

| | is trying to think of anything "there's Don and Eva make them take their chance." she blurts out so desperate that she is willing to let one of her own children be killed so she doesn't have to die. I feel sympathy for Tessie here as her desperate attempt to save herself was so sad it makes me feel sorry for her. |
| | Tessie draws her slip and she is the chosen one the winner of the lottery, the town are now preparing for her murder, "the children already had stones and someone had even given little Davie Hutchison a few pebbles", Tessie's own family are even expected to participate in her murder her son Davie only a young boy is "incouraged to take part. I feel sympathy for Tessie here as the children she brought life to are the ones helping to take hers. |

| | The town all have their stones ready and start to close in on Tessie, Tessie is desperately trying to plead for her life and beg for them to show her mercy, "it isn't right, it isn't fair. she screamed and then they were upon her.", I feel sympathy for Tessie here as from the start she did not like the tradition but had no objections to the ritual until she was the chosen one, I feel sorry for Tessie as she was to much of a coward to stand up for herself until it was to late. | |
| | 'The Lottery' by Shirley Jackson, shocking short story makes us feel a connection with the character of Tessie and causes us to feel sympathy for her and her tragic fate, Jackson used the themes of tradition and Human nature / evil to create the feeling of sympathy throughout the story. | |
