

Candidate 2 – Everyday life

The evidence and commentary for this candidate were used within the ESOL N5 webinar in January 2021.

In modern day technology has advanced ~~so~~ <sup>so</sup> much that it seems to be a ordinary thing for children to have a smart phone with multiply incredible features. However with great power, comes great responsibility is it a good idea for students to receive such advanced technology that may assist them or ~~not~~ may be harmful to them.

Now a days, schools has ~~adpt~~ <sup>adpt</sup> to use technology in education. This digitalising traditional teaching methods such as textbooks and notes to become online and accessible for students that are absent from school. They don't have to worry about messy handwriting or looking up at dictionary for words. This made handin work to teachers very easy. A touch on the screen ~~with~~ your work get delivered and marked back before the deadline. The internet is also a great place ~~for~~ full of resources ~~to~~ for revision, Podcast, notes and practise question exist ~~exist~~ in every corner on the internet, even videos and game related.

However, the internet is very large and useful but in fact the internet is too large. With the intention to educate yourself students will accidental discover other feature ~~the~~ technology have. For example "Youtube" the biggest website with millions of videos upload every second, is the best source for videos explaining. Students use "Youtube" for explaining complex subjects such as science and maths. However most video they watched are ~~people's~~ people influencing them and random funny videos. This creates ~~temptation~~ <sup>addiction</sup> to keep on watching random video and lost their initial intention. This cause their time wasted ~~the~~ while they could use it for something else like sleeping. Lack of ~~sleep~~ sleep cause poor concentration and productive rate.

In ~~conclude~~ conclusion technology has become very useful in everyday life. The benefits gain, brings up new problem for young people and it's up to them to make the decision.
