

Candidate A

Jupiter was king of the gods. One day the gods decided to hold a contest in order to decide the most beautiful bird. And so all the birds were getting ready, at top speed, were flying to Mount Olympus. For all were hoping to win a big prize.

However, Jackdaw did not have beauty of her own. Therefore she was collecting feathers, which other birds dropped, and was attaching them to her body. So Jackdaw glamorously got ready in order to become the most magnificent bird of them all.

Then the next day all the birds hurried to the contest. Jupiter, astonished by the Jackdaw's beauty, announced her the victor of the competition. But other birds, furious of Jackdaw's cheekiness, grabbed back their own feathers. Oh no! Jackdaw, now stripped naked, all beauty was lost. Other birds loudly laughed.

Jupiter realised Jackdaw was ugly. And so the angry god decided to punish her harshly and finally make a peacock the winner.

Candidate BThe Birds Beauty Contest

Jupiter wanted to find the most beautiful bird of all in the world.

Jupiter is King of the Gods. One day the Gods decided to hold a beauty contest to choose the most beautiful bird. And so all the birds got ready and, at top speed, they flew to Mount Olympus. For they all hoped to win a big prize.

A jackdaw came up with a clever plan to make herself the most beautiful of all the birds.

The Jackdaw however had no beauty of her own. Therefore she collected feathers, which had been dropped by other birds, and attached them to her own body. The jackdaw got ready so glamorously that she soon became the most magnificent of all the birds.

The next day, the contest began, but the jackdaw's thefts were revealed.

The next day all the birds hurried to the contest. Jupiter, astonished by the beauty of the jackdaw, announced her the winner of the contest. But other birds, furious at the jackdaws cheekiness, grabbed their own feathers back. Oh no! The jackdaw, now stripped naked lost all her beauty. The other birds laughed loudly.

In the end, justice was done.

Jupiter realised how ugly the jackdaw was. And so the angry Gods decided to punish her harshly and finally the peacock was made the winner.

Candidate C

Juppiter was the king of the gods. One day the god decided to hold a contest in order to choose the most beautiful bird. And so all of the birds had gotten ready and, at top speed, had flown to Mount Olympus. For they were all hoping to win the big prize.

A jackdaw however had no beauty of her own. Therefore she was collecting feathers, which other birds had dropped, and was attaching them to her own body. The jackdaw had gotten ready so glamorously that soon she became the most magnificent of the birds.

The next day all the birds had hurried to the contest. Juppiter, who was astonished by the jackdaws' beauty, announced her the winner of the contest. But other birds, who were furious at the cheekiness of the jackdaw, had grabbed back their own feathers. Oh no! The jackdaw, now stripped naked, lost all of her beauty. Other birds had laughed loudly.

Juppiter realised that the jackdaw was ugly. And so the angry god decided to punish her harshly and finally he made a peacock the winner.

Candidate D

Jupiter was the king of the gods. One day the gods held a contest to choose the most glamorously beautiful bird. And so all birds got ready and, at top speed, flew to Mount Olympus. The birds hoped for a big prize.

However the Jackdaw had no beauty of her own. Therefore she collected feathers, which were dropped from others, and she attached them to her body. The jackdaw got ready so that she became the glamorously magnificent of all the birds.

The next day all the birds hurried to the contest. Jupiter, was astonished by the Jackdaw's beauty. She was announced the winner of the contest. But the other birds, they're cheekiness was furious at the Jackdaw, grabbed back their own feathers. Oh no! The Jackdaw, now stripped naked, lost all her beauty. All the other birds loudly laughed.

Jupiter realised the jackdaw was ugly. And so the angry god decided to punish her harshly and finally made the peacock the winner

Candidate EThe Birds' Beauty Contest

Jupiter wanted to find the most beautiful bird in all of the world.

Jupiter was the King of the gods. One day the god decided to have a contest to choose the most beautiful bird. And so all of the birds got ready and, at top speed, flew to Mount Olympus. For all were hoping to win the big prize.

A jackdaw came up with a clever plan to make herself the most beautiful of all the birds.

However the jackdaw had no beauty of her own. Therefore she collected feathers, which other birds dropped, and attached them to her own body. So glamorously the jackdaw got ready that soon she became the most magnificent of all the birds.

The next day, the contest began, but the jackdaw's thefts were revealed.

The next day, all of the birds hurried to the contest. Jupiter, astonished by the jackdaws beauty, announced her as the winner. But the other birds, furious at the jackdaw's cheekiness, grabbed back their own feathers. Oh no! The jackdaw, now stripped naked, lost all beauty. The other birds laughed loudly.

In the end, justice was done.

Jupiter realised the jackdaw was ugly. And so the god was angry and decided to punish her harshly and finally made the peacock the winner.